One way to measure the economy of Island County is to chronicle the largest employers. The number of employees can reveal how much effort is required behind companies and organizations that may not be apparent otherwise.

The data is broken out into Government and Private Employers. Government accounts for many employees, but across fewer organizations. Private employee counts are lower, but there are over a thousand businesses in Island County and organizations that have five employees or fewer.

The U.S. Navy has the largest direct presence. No other employer has over ten thousand employees. Their indirect influence extends beyond that because of the support delivered by businesses and organizations that supply the Navy, and especially Navy personnel.

Within local government, the largest organizations are our schools. Of the top dozen governmental organizations, five of them are local school districts. Add in our public libraries and that makes six of the top dozen working on education. That doesn't account for the numerous other colleges, schools, and educational organizations in the county.

Within the group of businesses, the largest employer doesn't even operate from within the county. Boeing estimates that eight hundred of their employees live in Island County. That's larger than any on-island business by almost a factor of four. A less obvious group of employers are our various groceries and supermarkets. They are about one-third of the largest eighteen private employers. As with many companies, the number of employees we see as we make our purchases can be backed-up by dozens who are doing things like preparing food, stocking shelves, and keep the food flowing and their business running.

Beyond the larger employers, data show a significant presence of approximately two thousand businesses. It is important to note that this figure may not account for additional sole proprietors, which can be difficult to track accurately. Furthermore, the county is also home to hundreds of non-profit organizations that actively contribute to the local economic landscape. These businesses and non-profits collectively also play a vital role in driving the vitality of Island County's economy.
